Subject of Review: The COVID-19 pandemic and its associated economic impacts have implications for U.S. farm operations, the households that operate them, and the value of the land on which they farm. Farm operations received record-level direct Government payments in 2020 largely due to financial assistance from COVID-19 related programs. Farm households, many of which rely on off-farm employment to supplement their total household income, were susceptible to higher nonfarm unemployment rates observed in 2020. Yet, evidence suggests the demand for farmland remained high in 2020 and into 2021. This report examines the distribution of pandemic related assistance for farm operations, farm household susceptibility and resilience to off-farm unemployment, and developments in farmland rental and real estate markets during the first year of the COVID-19 pandemic.

Purpose of Review: The purpose of the review is to ensure the high-quality of the economic analysis, transparent explanation of methods, objective interpretation of results, and effective communication to the intended audience.
